000000000000 • 000000000000 THE COWARDICE OF A MOMENT

The Confession of the Captain. Translated from the French of Alphonse Daudet by Magazine.

A cold, foggy October morning during the siege, From Saint Pierre de Montrouge sounded the angelus. A flacre came rolling down the Avenue d'Orleans: it was in the employ of the minister of marine, and one of the last allowed in the streets of Paris Myer de Vilers and the writer. As Le Myer de Vliers and the writer. As aide-de-camp to Admiral La Ronciere, de Vilers was obliged to make the round of the forts to the south.

"Halt: Who goes there?"

"One of the marine service."

The Montrouge gate was fortified with cannon behind a gabion-or wickerwork protection filled with dirt-and bristied with bayonets. It was opened just wide enough to admit the passage of the ministerial carriage.

Carriage.

During the minute examination of our passports, my companion seemed persons During the minute examination of our passports, my companion seemed nervous and irritated. His face bore an expression which I had never seen on it before; he bit his lips and his eyes flashed. This brilliant talker, this inveterate chatterer was silent after we passed through the gate. What was the matter with him? What was he hiding from me? Not a word did he speak as we hurried through Gentilly—pillaged and deserted. A dog bounded out in front of our horses, waking the echoes with his barks. My friend drew a pistol and fired; the dog leaped into the air and fell dead. "You are a little nervous this morning, my friend," I said to him. "Is there any news?"

news?"

Very gravely he replied: "There is news in truth! He remained silent until we were nearing Fort Montrouge, when he brusquely said: "It is finished . . . Metz has capitulated! Bazaine has lost all, all, every honor!"

every honor!"

Those who did not suffer from the great Those who did not suffer from the great shipwreck of '70 cannot comprehend what Bazaine's name represented—the heroic Bazaine, as Gambetta called him—the spur which he was to our courage; the black night into which his defection plunged us. Imagine the hopes of a nation centered on one man! A people wild with enthusiasm and hope, believing that he had but to deliver them, ready to shout and suddenly... to find their idol fallen, their country lost!

I was so overwhelmed with dismay that I was so overwhelmed with dismay that I was almost stupefied. I have only a confused remembrance of our visit to the fort. The incident which stands out most clearly is the memory of the marvelous change effected upon the careless and laughing faces of the soldiers as my friend went among them telling his mournful news. Not a word, not a cry escaped the men, but the light and life faded from their faces, and blank despair and a look of death settled over them like masks. tied over them like masks.

Two months after our visit no one would have recognized the fort, with its broken walls and demolished roofs. A great breach in the ramparts constantly grew larger from the falling masonery and the shocks of the battering ram. A heavy smoke from the firing hung over all.

It was evening: the commandant was seated in the little hut which now served him as a lodging place. There was a knock and a man entered. He was a new arrival, and had been sent to take the place of a and a man entered. He was a new arrival, and had been sent to take the place of a captain who had had an arm torn from his shoulder by a shell. His face was pale and convulsed with suffering.

"My commandant." he exclaimed, passionately, "I am a dishonored man! There is nothing left for me but to die."

"My commandant," he exclaimed, passionately, "I am a dishonored man! There is nothing left for me but to die."

"De L.—, my friend, what is it?"

"It is—oh, shameful to tell! During an attack upon the bastion, fear seized methe firing took me by surprise—I was afraid! There! I have never known war—only once, in Mexico, and that was nothing serious. Under this hallstorm of shot, after two or three assaults, I lost my head and became confused. I saluted a howitzer shell—and the men saw me! I heard them and became confused. I saluted a howitzer shell—and the men saw me! I heard them laugh. Since then—all is at an end! There is something between my men and mesomething impalpable, yet not to be mistaken. A song is going about; it is sung to the tune of Barbanchu; you doubtless have heard the words. Wherever I go I hear this song, or imagine I hear it. Oh, my God! Night and day it rings in my head."

like a child. Outside could be heard the roar of cannon, like the pounding of the

are certainly crazy. Come here!"

And he made him sit beside him on the narrow iron bedstead, the only seat the room afforded. He put his hand affectionroom afforded. He put his hand affectionately on the young man's shoulder, and said all that he could to console that stricken soul. He told him that only friends were around him, and at Montrouge they did not love cowards. Why, then, talk of cowardice? And was there any one who had not ducked at a howitzer shell? There was a first time for everything. He had not been at the fort long enough to become acclimated, and he was nervous—a weakness to which any one was liable.

"You hear me—any one! Our soldiers, who to-day are heroes, who live in fire like salamanders, who play football with lighted bombs—if you could have seen them two months ago! They did not find themselves too large when it was necessary to leave by the embrasures of the casements. Do you know that Admiral Pothuau came twice a week and walked about the ramparts under full fire in order to give our months ago! They did not find themselves too large when it was necessary to leave by the embrasures of the casements. Do you know that Admiral Pothuau came twice a week and walked about the ramparts under full fire in order to give our men a lesson in courage? Torment yourself no more. You are an excellent officer: we like you; we esteem you. Hold up your head! One can die but once, and one ought to die fighting."

"I will remember. Thank you, my dear commandant."

And he went away. Witnesses have testified how, during the last day of the siege, de L—eagerly sought death upon the ramparts of the bastion, in the thickest of the fight. But death is a coquette; one cannot depend upon her!

On the night of the 28th of January, the forts, the redoubts, the secteurs, after a last formidable volley that enveloped the city in a cloud of fire and smoke, suddenly ceased firing. Paris was taken! Three days afterward, the morning of the evacuation to leave the content of the sum of the smoking pistol near him. The story of his death has been woven into a beautiful legend of Beaurepaire, but it is absolutely true in every particular.
